Cumberland University has had the privilege of claiming many of the nation's leaders as its alumni. Names of its graduates have appeared on the rolls of Congress, the Supreme Court, and other divisions of the national and state governments. Considered Cumberland's most distinguished graduate is the well known statesman, the Honorable Cordell Hull. Mr. Hull, whose home is near Lebanon, was graduated from the Cumberland University School of Law in 1891; he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University in 1926. Having served in numerous positions of the government, he was elected to the United States Senate in 1930. Three years later he arose to the high office of Secretary of State of the United States, and he remained in this office until 1944. Several authorities have ranked him among the first six of our "great" Secretaries of State. Many Americans think he was the greatest.

It is a privilege to dedicate the 1950 edition of the PHOENIX to the Honorable Cordell Hull, who deserves the highest honor Cumberland University could bestow.

THE STAFF.

THE HONORABLE CORDELL HULL

STORY OF THE PLAY

Cumberland University, nurturing mother of men and of colleges! Like nearly every female, matron or maid, she does not publicly claim her full age. One hundred and eight years—that is what she says. There are those who intimate that it ought to be 124. But it is known—no matter, for the moment, how—that she is actually 165 years old. The date celebrated as her birthday is really the anniversary of her second marriage. So says the venerable sage of her present faculty, Dixon Merritt.

On a May morning in 1748 Dr. Thomas Walker, with his company of hunters and explorers, came into the head of Powell valley and was charmed by the rugged and picturesque range of mountains to the west and named the country Cumberland in honor of William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland—third son of George II. It is a country which, in its full extent, stretches roughly from Cumberland, Md., to Gadsden, Alabama, but the name is commonly applied to that portion which lies in Tennessee and Kentucky.

The Cumberland country was, in no great while, settled and there had to be an institution of higher learning for it. Such an institution was established, mainly by church people, in 1785 at Nashville with the name of Davidson Academy. About 20 years later the institution was rechartered as Cumberland College. Under that name for another 20 years it was the pioneer college for all the Old Southwest.

In 1826, when Cumberland College was rechartered as the University of Nashville, some of her supporters refused to go along with this change and withdrew to a farm and some log buildings just out of Princeton, Kentucky and continued as Cumberland College. After about fifteen years the pressure to bring Cumberland back home became too strong. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church now supported it and the bulk of the church's strength was in Middle Tennessee.

While locations were being considered, Lebanon offered to put up $10,000 in cash for the purpose of erecting a building. Lebanon was a city of settled and seasoned culture. Cumberland University was opened in Lebanon, chartered by the State of Tennessee in 1842. Among her trustees were such Lebanon stalwarts as James Chamberlain Jones, Governor of Tennessee; Robert L. Caruthers, Congressman from the district; and Nathan Green, Justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Classes were begun in September in a little old church building on North Cumberland Street—a building still standing and in use. It took until 1844 to put up the new building. The munificent $10,000 which Lebanon had provided was by no means enough to do it, but more money came. And the building, when completed, was among the largest and handsomest educational structures in the South.

Before 1860 Cumberland had more alumni than either Harvard or the University of Virginia in the Congress of the U. S. and on the benches of federal and state courts. Its other departments were equally eminent.

Then the great crimson flower of war burst into bloom over the land. Cumberland's magnificent building was not destined to stand the shock. Before the end, it lay in ashes. By whom it was burned nobody seems to know for sure. But it was gone. Endowment securities were wiped out. When the war ended Cumberland had only its name and its debts. Yet, curiously, nearly all its faculty returned—not to salaries but to work.

Among the first to get back was an alumnus who stood among the ashes of his Alma Mater, a single corinthian column of which was standing. Sorrowful but not despondent, he picked up a piece of charred wood and wrote upon the column the single Latin word, "resurgam"—in translation, "I shall arise." That word became the voice of faith crying amid the desolation, and Cumberland did arise. That phrase stands yet on the University seal in its revised form, "E. Cineribus Resurgo."

Then followed about four decades of Cumberland's richest history. But her travail was not yet over.

Her second major calamity came in the early years of the 20th century. In the so-called union between the Cumberland Presbyterians and the Presbyterians U. S. A., Cumberland University was the little birdie in a badminton game, battered about from one to the other.

Squeezed between conflicting court decision she suffered loss from which she never fully recovered under Presbyterian auspices.

Another great chapter in Cumberland's remarkable history began in 1946. The self-perpetuating board of trustees, who had administered the affairs of Cumberland under Presbyterian auspices for more than a century, gave the University, lock, stock, barrel and breech-pin, to the Tennessee Baptist Convention. Lovely Tennessee College for Women was tenderly lifted from her withered nest and made to live anew on Cumberland's spacious campus.

The heritages of these two schools are welded together and now make up the flourishing new Cumberland. She moves on her upward path with new life, new hope and new joy. Her faculty and students enjoy a happy Christian cultural life together and maintain a cordial relationship with the community.

WALTER H. BRUSCHWITZ, Faculty Advisor

Cumberland University—a great drama. This is the motif of your 1950 PHOENIX. Throughout these pages the new PHOENIX is depicting for you scenes of this great drama. Since the rising of the curtain in 1842, Cumberland University has stirred the minds and hearts of its students—the cast—and its alumni and friends—the audience. During its "Acts" of existence, both seriousness and comedy have been experienced, and the PHOENIX has endeavored to present each in its proper aspect. In the future may you relive the particular role which you now are playing upon this stage by looking into your 1950 PHOENIX, and by being as worthy a member of the audience as you were of the cast.

To those students and members of the faculty and administration who have helped to produce the 1950 PHOENIX goes a sincere "thanks."

INTRAMURAL PROGRAM

Cumberland University provides a program of intramural sports suitable to all. Participation in wholesome games and sports by every student is encouraged by the University. The women's societies, men's literary societies, and other organizations make up the competitive teams. To the winners of the individual sports intramural awards are presented, the trophies are presented to winning teams. Trophies for winning teams, however, remain the property of the university. Participation in intramural sports is absolutely voluntary, but it is considered by the University as an important part of a student's activities.

The intramural program this year was well planned and carried out by Joe Black Hayes, director, and Eugene Lawrence, manager.
